Appcent is a research and development company rooted to its core values of curiousity and innovation. The company also continues to work with its R&D department to create innovative machine learning solutions for various fields. The R&D team has developed various machine learning applications using Deep Reinforcement Learning and NLP such as a recommendation system, marketing automation system and a HR automation system.
Proposal Introduction

Vision:
For the retail sector, it is to ensure that products or services are recommended based on the personal information, preferences or both of the customer group served by this sector.

Mission:
Data mining techniques were used in the studies to be carried out. In addition, the application has been created in a way that will detect the behavior of customers, and special interfaces for users are designed automatically, and remote warning messages (Push) can be sent.

Content:
The application developed within the scope of the project was able to recommend the right products to the right person and together with systems (A/B Testing, Push Messages) operating outside the recommendation system, created a constantly dynamic and living space, minimizing the problems experienced by the business it serves in marketing.
Partners

Expertise, profiles and types of partners we are looking for:

- Central European countries & country coordinators
- Network of regional retail brands and vendors
